Are Too Many Phase III Cancer Clinical Trials Set Up to Fail?

"Our study highlights the need to more efficiently identify which new therapies merit Phase III testing. In order to sustain the rate of innovation in cancer therapeutics and ensure that our patients have access to effective yet affordable therapies, the clinical trial pipeline in oncology must be efficient and accurate. Our work shows that in the past 10 years, this has not been the case." Read More >>

"The ACRP Community gives me a sense of belonging. It is my big professional family. No matter how many jobs or what kinds of experiences I gain in different aspects of research, when I call myself a Clinical Research Professional, this is the place that I identify myself with. It is a place for learning and networking: asking questions, sharing experiences and expertise and getting to know amazing, smart people."
